Mrs. Antoinette Piolo Held Miss Hellner-Nielsen, of Denmark, Will Show Police Congress Her Formula, Which Identifies International Characters With Speed and Certainty

Miss Ingeborg Charlotte Hellner-Nielsen, Danish finger-print expert, arrived at the Hotel Pennsylvania yesterday by way of the Frederik VIII to teach the New York Police Department a thing or two. She is much shorter than her name, being a trifle more than five feet in height, and less formidable than her title, for she is blonde and red-linned.

Sometimes, if an American fugitive is taken in Denmark, his fingerprints must be mailed to your country and verified by cablegram, a costly, lengthy process. By our system only the formula need be cabled, telegraphed or telephoned to the central bureau, and within a few hours the verification will come."

Together with Hakon Jorgensen, subdirector of police in Copenhagen, and Erik Schaeffer, a military judge, Miss Hellner-Nielsen will demonstrate before the International Police Conference, to be held here later in the month, a new system, originated by Mr. Jorgensen, for identifying criminals.

Miss Hellner-Nielsen is surprised to find how different the English she studied for eight years in Copenhagen acholos sounds from the English which is spoken here, but even a limited vocabulary did not stifle her enthusiasm if or the new system.

"We have compiled a directory which registers international criminals," she explained with Mr. Schaeffer's assistance. Women are particularly adapted to the fine work of registering fingerprints for the ercord, says Miss Hellner-Nielsen. Good eyesight, painstaking attention to details, infinite patience and absolute accuracy she described as essentials for the work, qualities to be found more readily in women than in men, she believed. Already her department has engaged the services of ten young women assistants, she said.

The feminine element of Copenhagen is an industrious one, Miss Hellner-Nielsen confided, because it exceeds the male population several times. There are plenty of women have been appointed to the police one.

"We have compiled a directory which registers international criminals," she explained with Mr. Schaeffer's assistance. "In it are listed besides the name, record and birthplace of the offender a string of figures which serves to identify him. Fingerprints never lie, so we have based our dictionary upon them. "Now, when the police in one city have captured a dangerous criminal whom they believe to be the possessor of a record they notify the central identification bureau. If the formula corresponds to the fingerprint figures roted by the policeman the entire history of the man is laid bare. It saves time. The Argentine delegation to the police gathering arrived yesterday on the Munson liner Southern Cross, which was met by representatives of the New York and Hoboken police forces when it docked in Hoboken. The delegation consisted of Francisco La Guarda, chief of police; Cesar E. Etcheverry, commissioner of identification, and German Olgado, secretary, all from Buenos Ayres.

Deputy Commissioner Douglas Mc-Kay, Inspector William T. Dovid and Lieutenant John J. O'Connell, of the New York force, accompanied them across the river to the foot of West Twenty-third Street, where they were met by a guard of motorcycle policemen, which escorted them to their headquarters at the Biltmore. They expressed pleasure at the signs of order, uniformity and convenience which they found in the city.
